

This is just a bastardized form of a cooperative monopoly, which is essentially against the law. I understand every business large and small desires to make more money, but there are set limitations for certain reasons. The wealth to some extent should be equally distributed to allow for a thriving business community. In addition, I think that the merger of informational resources is limiting to the knowledge of the general public. If the true desire is to make mindless drones of us all then before it comes to a head I'm afraid an uprisal would be the precursor. Don't allow for one source to become the only information for a community. The whole idea sounds too Bg Brother to me.
